PARADE AS SEEN BY MISS CLARK

Daughter of the Speaker of the House Writes of Great Pageant.

SHE WAS IMPRESSED

Describes in Detail March, Tableau and Their Significance to Political Conditions.

By GENEVIEVE CHAMP CLARK.

Daughter of Speaker Clark.

With the tri-color of suffrage waving under smiling skies, a valiant army of American women portrayed to a quarter-million spectators yesterday a poem of color, ingenuity and skill that spoke eloquently of the grand and beauty of a woman's soul.

Never has Washington seen even in its palmy days such a spectacle as unfolded before the eyes of the thousands of women who gathered on the National Mall. The footstep of many armies has sounded on this famous way, but for the first time in its history the nation's capital was the scene of a woman's triumph. The slow pendulum of woman progress, it was an army not covered with the dust and gore of battle, but one of womanhood, arrayed in her gentlest virtues. The signs of strife were there, however, in the flashing eyes and white hair of veteran suffragists. These hardy pioneers, who stood on the firing line of attack, contrasted vividly the past and the present of woman's suffrage.

The pageant which started from the Peace Monument, by the Capitol, reached its climax and conclusion in the lane between the Treasury and the White House.

Before a huge crowd that filled every nook and cranny of the Treasury steps and campus and the grand stand erected around the Sherman statue, was enacted an allegorical spectacle the like of which has never been witnessed, so far as I know, and certainly never in the open air.

The broad steps and Greek portico and facade of the Treasury made a wonderful stage for such a scene. The background of the huge pillars and temple took one back thousands of years to some in ancient Greece, where crowds of maidens and children made votive offerings to the gods of old in like processions and graceful soul-stirring dances.

Miss Hecker as Columbia.

Promptly at 3 the immense audience rose to its feet as the band played the opening of "The Star Spangled Banner." A hush fell over the scene as the central pillars, appeared Columbia with stately tread. The part was taken by Miss Hedwig Hecker, of New York, a beautiful, brunette, who wore the national colors and the crown of stars as it appears on the coin of the country. In her hand she held the staff of power. Behind her trailed a gorgeous blue mantle.

The monster crowd held its breath as this impersonation of our loved country came with majestic mien down the long flight of steps, reaching the broad platform before the final steps she turned as though halting some one in the far distance and summoned to her side Justice and her attendants. Between the pillars appeared Justice, in purple, followed by a flock of attendants garbed in a harmonizing different tone of the same color. Gracefully they came, but groupingly as if to find the truth. When they reached Columbia, who awaited them she smiled them and they moved to the left of the platform.

Next from behind the sheltering columns timidly approached a tiny girl and boy, representing Love, the herald of Charity. The little girl carried on her arm a basket of roses from which she scattered blossoms in the way of Charity—Miss Emma Ostrander—who followed closely behind with a group of youthful maidens, representing the young women whose patience and perseverance have brought about such a wonderful sight. It will be many a day before the American people will see another sight so beautiful.

Miss Noyes as Liberty.

To the heroic strains of the triumphal march, Liberty, a tall, slender figure, fairly flew through the columns. She was personated by Mrs. Florence Fleming Noyes, the noted street dancer, who is called the reincarnation of the Golden Age goddess. "Liberty" was garbed in diaphanous robes of coral, and as she seemed to swoop lightly down the Treasury steps the spectators fairly gasped to see that her dancing feet were bare. "Liberty" danced as a bird flies, with one graceful motion sinking into another. The very freedom and abandon of her movements voiced the spirit of liberty. Never did Greek slave dance more rapturously, beautifully, and the very heart of the drama and poetry of motion that Mrs. Noyes did yesterday as "Liberty."

It was the most dramatic feature of the parade, and furnished a scene that will live long in the memory of those fortunate enough to witness it. She was attended by a company of sprites, which included among them Miss Edith Hill, daughter of "Aida" the soprano from Connecticut. The sprites, however, wore sandals.

Peace—Mrs. Eleanor Lawson—in pure white, followed Liberty, pausing long enough to kiss her cheek and release the snow white dove of peace, which flew straight to the White House—a happy augury for the new administration. Following Peace were her attendants, some carrying the olive branch and others the cornucopias of plenty.

Last, but not least, came Hope, the child of Love, who, portrayed beautifully by Miss Mildred Anderson, of New York, wearing a variegated robe, which gave a transparent effect. As she reached the bottom of the steps she broke into a graceful, girlish dance. It was not as classic and barbaric in splendor as that of Liberty, but whimsical and joyful as Hope. Her followers danced in and out the columns, now seen.

GOOD ROADS MEN MEET.

Convention to Be Held Here to Promote Highway.

One of President Wilson's first public functions will be the reception of delegates to the Second Federal Aid Good Roads Convention, to be held at the Raleigh Thursday and Friday. Thursday morning after the delegates have been registered they will proceed in a body to the White House, where President Wilson will receive them in the East Room.

While President Wilson has not committed himself to any particular policy or program in the matter of Federal aid, he is known to be a strong advocate of improved highways, and the delegates are hoping that they may have from him a word of general counsel and encouragement.
